While she performed Red Cross duties, Civil Patrol duties, and any other requests made of her, she never let down the cause of the Confederate History. Can't you picture this valiant Southern Gentlewoman, the valor and spirit of the Confederacy spurring her onward, to hours of work in the Red Cross room rolling bandages, hours of knitting, hours as a Gray Lady? Such a woman was Virginia Ferguson Cary. Truly a Daughter of the Confederacy. I believe that the answer to a question such as "What is A Daughter of the Confederacy?" could be answered by saying "Virginia Ferguson Cary."

As Historian General, Mrs. Cary ever worked for the true rendition of Confederate History. It is reported that hardly a single instance of misinformation escaped her eagle eye. Loving the Cause as she did, and being an inveterate reader she came upon many items of misinformation and in her own capable way set about getting them straight. For example when she "sc...

the untrue story regarding the story pertaining to Grant's refusal to accept Lee's sword. She insisted that "nothing was said about a sword," and cited volume and page of "Grant's Memoirs" to prove her point.

I first knew Mrs. Cary when I was just out of my teens, only recently casting my first vote. I never saw Mrs. Cary in person, but her wonderful letters to Chapter Historians and her inspiring messages in the U. D. C. Magazine made such an impression upon me that I felt her to be a personal friend. I regret that I was never able to meet so superb a personality. Thus, after these many years, I dare to meet the challenge of our present Historian and with great temerity tell of my great admiration for Mrs. Ferguson Cary.

As Historian General she urged all of us to become 'history conscious' and today we are still reaping rewards from her efforts. In her own inimicable way, she arranged programs and program material which truly reflected our Southern, Confederate Heritage. She especially stressed such subjects as Southern Education, "Confederate Mothers"; "Your Own Confederate Ancestors," and above all she stressed the importance of spiritual values. She urged such projects as an annual picnic and an Armistice Day Program in conjuction with the American Legion. Through her magazine messages, she constantly gave fresh and new ideas to small and isolated chapters, As she urged every chapter in the organization to subscribe one hundred per cent to the magazine and to that it was in every public and college library, she utilized every inch allowed her to bring inspiring book reviews, fresh ideas and constructive information to every reader. Those who are so fortunate as to have preserved the magazines of her regime would do well to re-read them when their literary tastes have become jaded.

Ever on the alert to protect the History of the Confederacy and the organization of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, Mrs. Cary once asked a News Broadcaster to refrain from using the term "Civil War" and explained her reasons. He gladly consented and went on to tell her facts which showed him to be the grandson of a Confederate Cavalryman who had served throughout the war. On another occasion she, Mrs. Cary, took issue with a music critic who, through the columns of a Washington, D. C., newspaper expatiated the beauty and rhythm of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and who was suggesting that this hymn be substituted for our National Anthem. Mrs. Cary immediately took issue and through the same paper inquired, "Does the writer's imagination believe that those states which had a great deal of influence in the founding of the nation would submit to the adoption of a national anthem which vilifies those states because in a later period they had fought for the rights embedded in the Nation's basic law?"

A beautiful and wonderfully successful project of Mrs. Cary's regime was the engagement calendar for 1950, which Mrs. Cary prepared in conjunction with the Dietz Press of Richmond, warm friends of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. The calendar, entitled "The South, Its Past and Present," was beautifully compiled and the photographs contained therein are treasures in the hearts and eyes of all of us who have carefully preserved our copies, treasuring them as "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." The calendar sold for only one dollar but it added many dollars to the treasury of the department.

We are indebted to Mrs. Cary for the concise, informative instructions for the presentation of essays or book reviews we choose to send in for competition or preservation of any Southern History. It is gratifying to know that Mrs. Cary received a wonderful response to the rules she set up. In 1950 she told her committee as they commented on the first essay received, "It has that professional look which I have been urging. We are no longer an infant organization. We are very 'grown-up' and we should present only scholarly papers both in content and appearance." To this day we are following the rules laid down by Mrs. Cary and it is our earnest hope that we are not letting her down.

With inspiring messages, book reviews and her own articles in the U. D. C. Magazine, Mrs. Cary did indeed make the United Daughters of the Confederacy 'History Conscious.' It is now up to us to faithfully carry on this historical work.

Virginia Ferguson Cary, a great lady and a great historian, this is a small attempt to say "Thank you."

FARM NEWS

By J. A. Smith, County Agent

Some excellent small grain yields have been reported. Jim Franklin, of the Hollywood neighborhood, had an oat yield of 99.16 bushels per acre, and Mosby Harris, Spout Spring, hit the 80's in barley.

Small grain harvest is in full swing. Many who would prefer holding their grain, can't for lack of adequate farm storage. Some farm magazines say that farmers in some sections of the country are going in for on the farm storage in a big way. The County ASC Committee has a set-up that could possibly interest a number of farmers. The Alfalfa seeding time is approaching. What should the producer plan on for 1961? Looks now as if spraying will be the only control recommended. There are several new chemicals out that do an excellent job when mixed with fertilizers, but may not be cleared for use by next winter. We are recommending the following: (1) the farmer who is now growing a sufficient acreage of alfalfa to justify a sprayer or who has access to a sprayer, to continue as usual but plan to control the alfalfa weevil by spraying next year. This would mean (a) to keep the alfalfa he now has and would ordinarily keep, and (b) make new seedings as usual, but (c) make arrangements to have a sprayer available for next spring. (2) The grower with a small acreage of alfalfa but who does not have access to a sprayer, to make arrangements for custom spraying next spring; (3) the farmer who is not using alfalfa in their feed program should not sell alfalfa this year unless definite arrangements for spraying next spring can be made prior to seeding.

Following six points give the principal information. Details are available from the ASC office:

1 Loan made for storage of farm grains; 2. Storage facilities may or may not be used to store grain under the price support program, 80% of cost of bin may be borrowed at 4% interest with four years to make repayment. Interest on the unpaid balance; 4. A service fee of 1% loan but not less than $5.00 is paid when loan is made; 5. Insurance must be carried on the structure (face value of the loan); 6. The loan is covered by a chattel mortgage and promissory note.

This fall, there will be two feeder calf sales and yearling - steer sales, Sale dates yearling steer sale, September 16; 1st feeder calf sale, September 29; 2nd feeder calf sale, October 20. Every herd will have had a brucellosis test in time for these sales. This could be the year you should begin selling through an organized feeder sale. They have been increasing in size by 10% annually for a number of years. Consignment must be in by August 15.
